Audio performances

Professionals have benchmarked the FOX cassette and confirm that the FOX performs very well in the lower frequency and is close to type II in the higher-frequency.

Our FOX has very close characteristics than the BASF Ferro extra produced in the 90's. You can find our latest technical datasheet on:

C-90 and other recording time

5. Do you plan to release FOX C-90 tapes in the future?

We are currently testing the market with the C-60 and learning from our clients and partners. In the meantime, we are looking for the best ways to produce cassettes with more recording time but no compromise on quality and consistency.

6. Who still manufacture cassettes? Why other brands are able to produce C90 cassettes?

As far as we know, we are the last manufacturer of fresh cassette tapes in the world. Some other companies offer services to replicate and/or assemble tapes and cases. However, they do not manufacture the cassette tapes.

Cassette type II or type IV

7. Do you plan to release type II Chrome and/or type IV Metal tapes in the future?

Not for the moment, as we want to first check that there is still a market for the compact cassette. Our Fox type I offers very good quality for music recording. Our priority is to make our FOX cassette accessible to the market globally and then to release other recording times.

We have a similar process with reel to reel. First, we got the quality right, then made sure anyone could have access to it.

Other design

8. Will you change the design of the cassette?

We do not have any plan at the moment, but we will consider it if the market demands it.

Divers

9. Why the FOX name ?

FOX stands for Ferric-OXide. Moreover the fox is an animal with an orange tail. Orange is the main color of our brand RecordingTheMasters.
